

1970s Plant Pot Hanger Globe Hangers Lamps: A Nostalgic Journey Into Retro Home Decor

The 1970s was a decade marked by bold and eclectic home decor styles, and one of the most iconic trends of that era was the use of plant pot hangers and globe hangers lamps. These whimsical and functional accents added a touch of bohemian flair to any space, and they remain popular today as a way to bring a retro vibe to modern interiors.

Plant Pot Hangers

Plant pot hangers were a staple of 1970s home decor, and they continue to be popular today as a way to add greenery and life to any room. These hangers were typically made of macrame, a type of knotted cord, and they were often adorned with colorful beads or tassels. Plant pot hangers were used to suspend plants from the ceiling, creating a lush and inviting atmosphere. Some popular plants for hanging in these hangers included ferns, spider plants, and pothos.

Types of Plant Pot Hangers

There were many different types of plant pot hangers available in the 1970s, each with its own unique style. Some of the most popular types included:

- Macrame Hangers: These hangers were made of knotted macrame cord and were often decorated with beads or tassels. They were a popular choice for hanging both indoor and outdoor plants.
- Wicker Hangers: These hangers were made of wicker, a type of woven plant material. They were a durable and stylish option for hanging plants in a variety of settings.
- Wire Hangers: These hangers were made of wire and were a simple and affordable option for hanging plants. They were often used in outdoor settings or for hanging plants from shelves or windowsills.

Globe Hangers Lamps

Globe hangers lamps were another popular trend in 1970s home decor. These lamps were made of a metal frame with a globe-shaped shade, and they were often suspended from the ceiling or hung from a wall. Globe hangers lamps were a versatile lighting option, providing both ambient and task lighting. They were often used in living rooms, bedrooms, and offices.
