Rubina and her siblings often went hungry, and they had to work to help their parents make ends meet.

Despite her difficult circumstances, Rubina was a bright and ambitious child. She loved to dance and sing, and she dreamed of one day becoming a Bollywood star. In 2008, Rubina's dream came true when she was cast in the film Slumdog Millionaire. The film was a huge success, and Rubina's performance earned her critical acclaim.

Slumdog Millionaire won eight Oscars, including Best Picture, and Rubina became a star overnight. She traveled the world promoting the film, and she met many famous actors and directors. Rubina's life had changed dramatically, and she was living her dream.

However, Rubina's success was not without its challenges. She was criticized for her lack of education, and she was often stereotyped as a "slumdog." Rubina also faced discrimination because she was a Muslim. Despite these challenges, Rubina remained determined to succeed.

In 2010, Rubina published her autobiography, Slumgirl Dreaming. The book was a bestseller, and it gave readers an intimate look at her life and her journey to stardom. Rubina's story is an inspiring tale of resilience, determination, and the power of dreams.

Rubina Ali is now a successful actress, author, and UNICEF Goodwill Ambassador. She uses her platform to speak out against poverty and discrimination, and she inspires others to never give up on their dreams.
