Uncle Sam Plantation is a historic plantation located in Edgard, Louisiana. The plantation was built in the 1800s and is named after Samuel Zemurray, who purchased the property in 1929. The plantation is now a museum and is open to the public.

Visitors to Uncle Sam Plantation can tour the plantation house, which has been restored to its original condition. The house is furnished with antiques and artifacts from the Zemurray family. Visitors can also learn about the history of the plantation and the Zemurray family through exhibits and guided tours.

In addition to the plantation house, Uncle Sam Plantation also features a number of other historic buildings, including a chapel, a blacksmith shop, and a barn. The plantation also has a large collection of farm equipment and agricultural tools. Visitors can take a walk through the plantation's gardens and orchards, or take a ride on a horse-drawn carriage.

Uncle Sam Plantation is a beautiful and historic landmark that offers visitors a glimpse into the past. The plantation is a great place to learn about the history of Louisiana and the Zemurray family. It is also a great place to relax and enjoy the scenery.

History of Uncle Sam Plantation

Uncle Sam Plantation was built in the 1800s by a wealthy sugar planter named John Armant. The plantation was originally known as Armant Plantation. In 1929, Samuel Zemurray purchased the plantation and renamed it Uncle Sam Plantation. Zemurray was a successful businessman who made his fortune in the banana industry. He was also a philanthropist and donated much of his wealth to charitable causes.

Zemurray died in 1961, and his wife, Doris Duke, inherited Uncle Sam Plantation. Duke was a wealthy socialite and art collector. She donated Uncle Sam Plantation to the National Trust for Historic Preservation in 1972. The plantation is now a museum and is open to the public.
